

Headline: DiCaprio happy leaders taking climate change more seriously

Byline: Associated Press

Published Date: 02:03 PM January 07, 2016

Section: entertainment

Word Count: 1806

Content:

Leonardo DiCaprio arrives at the world premiere of "The Revenant" at the TCL Chinese Theatre on Wednesday, Dec. 16, 2015, in Los Angeles. AP

Leonardo DiCaprio arrives at the world premiere of "The Revenant" at the TCL Chinese Theatre on Wednesday, Dec. 16, 2015, in Los Angeles. AP

NEW YORK — Leonardo DiCaprio feels optimistic that the debate over climate change has begun to wane and world leaders are finally starting to take it more seriously.

"The scientific community has been screaming out loud. Ninety-nine per cent of the scientific community is in agreement that man is contributing to (climate change)," DiCaprio told The Associated Press on the red carpet for his new film, "The Revenant" on Wednesday.

"The argument is over. Anyone that doesn't believe that climate change is happening doesn't believe in science," said DiCaprio, who has remained an active player for the issue.

READ: Volkswagen scandal set for movie produced by DiCaprio

The actor previously has addressed the United Nations on climate control, donated millions of dollars to environmental causes, and narrated the 2014 short film, "Carbon," which presents ideas for climate change solutions.

But after the UN Climate Conference in Paris, which ended last month, he feels world leaders are finally willing to address the issue more seriously.

"No one has the answer what the future is going to look like, and no one can foresee the dramatic effect that climate instability will have on our planet and the biodiversity in it, but I'm just very proud for the first time we've taken a step in the right direction," DiCaprio said.

READ: Leonardo DiCaprio named UN Messenger of Peace

Subscribe to our daily newsletter

By providing an email address. I agree to the Terms of Use and acknowledge that I have read the Privacy Policy.